IS A FRIEND OF THE FBI AND HAS ADJOINING OFFICE SPACE TO THE "CURRENT AFFAIR" PRODUCTIONS. ASAC NORTH AUTHORIZED CONTACT WITH IN AN ATTEMPT TO IDENTIFY THE SECRET INFORMANT UTILIZED BY "CURRENT AFFAIR" IN THEIR PROGRAM DETAILING THE MURDER OF HOFFA. NEW YORK BELIEVES THAT "CURRENT AFFAIR" STAFF WOULD NOT IDENTIFY THIS WITNESS TO THE FBI AND COULD USE THE FBI CONTACT ON A FUTURE SHOW TO SOMEHOW LEND CREDIBILITY TO THEIR SOURCE.

THAT THE "CURRENT AFFAIR" STAFF REFUSED TO IDENTIFY THIS SOURCE, HOWEVER, HE DID LEARN THE MAN RESIDES IN NEW DRLEAMS, LOUISIANA AND IS DYING OF CANCER. HE ALSO DETERMINED THAT THE STAFF QUESTIONED THE CREDIBILITY OF THE SOURCE EVEN THOUGH THE SOURCE ALLEGEDLY PASSED A POLYGRAPH EXAMINATION.

In the Red Fox lot, Hoffa got into Joey Giacalone's car, driven by Chuckie O'Brien, who had borrowed it earlier to deliver a fish.

Hoffa believed he would be taken to a meeting with Anthony Provenzano and Anthony Giacalone to smooth out problems between Hoffa and Tony. Pro

In reality, it was a setup for an assassination carried out by New Jersey Teamsters close to Provenzano—. Thomas Andretta and the Briguglio brothers, Gabriel and Salvatore.

The mob wanted to keep Hoffa from getting back in the union and clamping down on the mob's easy access to union pension funds during the presidency of Frank Fitzsimmons.

The killing was probably quick, and the body most likely destroyed not far from the murder site, somewhere in the Detroit area.

Investigators and others involved in the case say the murder probably was authorized at the highest levels of organized crime, which did not foresee all the pressure it would generate on its operations.

The HOFFEX theory was some what substantiated by later discoveries; records of telephone calls from Provenzano's Teamsters local to O'Brien's home number several weeks before Hoffa vanished before Hoffa vanished.

The same number was found on a slip of paper at the home of Salvatore.
Briguglio in Paranus, N.J., when FBI agents arrived to search it the day after he was slain.

ne was stain.

Don't you guys ever quit?" Briggilo's son asked when the family's mourning was disrupted by the FBI search.

Charles (Chuckie) O'Brien has his own theory about Hoffa: The government killed him as an excuse to delye into the powerful Teamsters and left Chuckie to be the fall guy.

"It got so crazy," said O'Brien, who spent 10 months in prison in 1979 for a labor law violation and falsifying a loan application: "People saying they saw this and people saying they saw that. It just made me crazy.

"There's no way there was a meeting with Tony Giacalone or Tony Provenzano, and I don't care what anybody says. It hist never happened that way. ... I'd have to be an insane maniac to use Joey's car and take Mr. Hoffa"

Although many of the key figures have died or gone to prison for various crimes, the FBI still regards the Hoffa case as open. The bureau used the case as a springboard for a series of other investigations that struck deep into organized crime and led to government control of the Teamsters.

"Hoffa was never found, but you have to balance the fact that the massive resources devoted to it paid off in the end," said Koenig, the top state police member of the Hoffa investigative team. "There were a number of cases... where there were convictions and people put in jall, putting really kind of a damper on mob activity in the Detroit area for many years."

That doesn't make James Hoffa feel much better about his father's fate.

"What amazes me with all the informants the FBI has, all the supposedly bad guys who have turned over over the years, that they've never been able to come up with anyone who has said, 'Oh, by the way let me tell you about Mr. Hoffa,' he said.

"And now after 17 years, I really

"And now after 17 years, I really don't think they're going to solve it. It makes me real sad that's not going to happen."

"The mayor always enjoyed people with a wide life experience," said Malcolin Dade, then a mayoral aide, who joined Young and Hoffa for the meeting on July 29, 1975. "He wouldn't have much to say to the queen of England, but limmy Hoffa certainly had experience."

Now, the mayor was asking the exiled former president of the Teamsters whether it was possible to swing a loan from the union's pension funds to keep the Book in business: Though his parole banned him from union activities, Hoffa still had clout with some Teamsters people.

Dade recalled that the short, thickset Hoffa projected his usual selfconfidence during the meeting and was attentive to the mayor's proposal, but noncommittal.

Hoffa had left a much different impression just before the meeting in a chance encounter with Ricardo Lubienski, at the time a Detroit Common Pleas Court judge:

Searching for a cigarette machine prior to a judges conference, Lubienski was startled to recognize one of the few other people in the Book's lobby...

"My God, it's Jimmy Hoffa," Lubienski thought, remarking to himself that this supposed dynamo of a man appeared "small, lonely and vulnerable."

The judge and Hoffa shook hands and exchanged a few words Lubienski reminded Hoffa that the Teamsters had helped his campaign for judge

Nice guy, Lubienski thought as they parted;
Mentally reconstructing that brief meeting countless times, Lubienski keeps coming back to the eerie image of Hoffa looking isolated in the lobby.

prison and determined - with his usual bulldog intensity to win court clearance for a bid to reclaim the Teamsters presidency.

Toward that end, Hoffa had a crucial meeting on tap for tomorrow, out in Bloomfield Township.

Pete, you like to breathe, don't you?" Hoffa recently had asked Peter Karagozian, an old union pal. "That's how bad I want to get back in."

Hoffa said he had some scores to settle in the union. Karagozian advised him to get a bodyguard, warning, "You don't know who you're bucking.

Hoffa shrugged it off:

haven't got the guts."

About 250 miles away, Detroit labor lawyer James Philip Hoffa, ""II cut." 34-year-old son of the union. legend; was enjoying a vacation with his wife and two boys at a cottage on the banks of Boardman River, south of Traverse City: The finicky northern Michigan weather had been good. He was relaxed.

 In St. Louis, Hoffa's daughter, Barbara Crancer, also labor lawyer, was in the middle of one of the most hectic summers she could remember. On top of a crushing work schedule, Crancer's husband, Rob ert, a steel company executive, was in the hospital, recovering from surgery after a serious car crash. There also were back-to-school things to do for sthe couple's 12 year-old daughter.

What else is going to come up, Crancer wondered

On July 30, 1975, Jimmy Hoffa awoke as usual at 6:30 a.m. at his home on Square Lake, a small lake off M-24 between Pontiac and Holly.

Once a summer-only residence in northern Oakland County's cottage country, the place had been refurbished and insulated by Hoffa for year-round living.

At 7:45 a.m., he took a call from the president of a New York City Teamsters local. Although technically no longer a Teamster, Hoffa kept up with union matters and was in regular contact with local leaders.

It was important to keep his network alive for the triumphant return he envisioned. A meeting that afternoon would help clear the way.

Hoffa told his wife, Josephine, he would be gone for a while in the afternoon, but expected to be home by 4 p.m. and would grill steaks for their. dinner. After 39 years of marriage, she knew he would not be late.

The meeting, to which Hoffa finally. had agreed after several broken dates, was to be a sit-down with Anthony Provenzano, a New Jersey Teamsters boss known to friends as Tony Proand known to federal investigators as an associate of the Mafia.

Hoffa and Provenzano had been feuding since they did time together at: the federal penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pa. — Hoffa for fraud, conspiracy and jury tampering, Tony Pro for racketeering and extortion. Hoffa blamed Provenzano and his pals in the mob for much of the federal heat that had come down on the Teamsters and their president in the 1960s.

Brothers Anthony and Vito Giacalone - Tony Jack and Billy Jack to friends and the police who regularly tailed them - had lobbied hard for the peace meeting. The Giacalones described themselves as businessmen but authorities regarded both as captains of the Detroit Mafia.

Hoffa expected Tony lack to be at the meeting, which undoubtedly dominated his thoughts as he puttered in the yard and chatted with Marty Woehl, the 11-year-old boy next door.

Woehl remembered that the conversation ended around. 9 a.m. when Hoffa went inside to answer the phone. The boy, who did occasional errands for Hoffa, always had liked his neighbor.

"He treated you like a realperson; he gave you respect," Woehl said. "And when you're a kid, you really appreciate that.

Woehl, who still lives in the house next door, said that was the last quiet day in the neighborhood for quite some time.

That morning, Charles, Lenton O'Brien — everybody called him Chuckie - was in the basement of Marvin Adell's house on Inkster Road in Bloomfield Township, getting dressed for work.

He donned a white shirt and sport coat. A necktie would be a choker for the 5-foot-8, 200-pluspound O'Brien on what promised to be a hot day.

O'Brien had been bunking with Adell, a wealthy industrialist and longtime friend, for about a year, since O'Brien's first marriage went on the rocks.

The arrangement was about to end because Chuckie, who worked for the Teamsters at union headquarters on Trumbull near Tiger Stadium in De troit, had remarried and was transferring to a job with the union in Florida.

Chuckie's new wife, Brenda, had a family business in the South, and he was ready to get out of Detroit — and the long shadow of Jimmy Hoffa.

The son of a Teamster who was killed in the union's violent, formative years — when Hoffa muscled his way to the top — O'Brien had been spon sored by Hoffa into various union jobs. As a young man, he was almost embarrassingly devoted to Hoffa, describing himself as Jimmy's foster son and calling Hoffa "Dad."

But the relationship between Hoffa and O'Brien, 40, had soured Hoffa believed O'Brien had squandered some of his money while Hoffa was in prison. O'Brien had increasingly allied himself with Frank Fitzsimmons, Hoffa's handpicked successor as union president; and now his rival for power. Fitzsimmons had helped O'Brien get the Flori-

People in the union's power circle regarded O'Brien as a one-time trusted. Hoffa underling who didn't shy away from tough jobs, but lately was more a braggart and gossip, with a growing reputation for embroidering the truths.

Since O'Brien didn't have a car, Adell gave him a lift on weekdays to a shopping center at Maple and Telegraph roads, where Teamster organizer Bobby Holmes Jr. picked him up for the ride into Detroit.

This day, O'Brien was early enough field Athletic Club.

Giacalone usually kept to himself at the club, or spent time in the steam room. But today, he was outgoing, greeting other members, shaking hands and signing up for a 12:30 session with masseur Greg Ryan.

Chuckie O'Brien had decided to skip a union meeting he was scheduled to attend in Toronto and spent most of the morning packing up personal things for his upcoming move. He ambled out of his second floor office, around 11:15 a.m. and saw a seven-foot-long cardboard carton sitting on the receptionist's desk.

"A fish," the receptionist said.

A salmon, to be exact, sent frozen by a Seattle Teamsters official to Detroit local leader. Bobby, Holmes Sr. O'Brien hefted the awkward box and guessed it to weigh about 40 pounds. Sloshing sounds came from inside and O'Brien figured the big fish had been sitting at the airport for a few days.

With little else to do, he offered to run it out to Holmes' Farmington Hills residence before the fish went bad.

A union-owned station wagon used for errands was gone, so O'Brien called his buddy Joey Giacalone, son of Uncle Tony, at his office at Lift All, a heavy machinery firm on West Vernor, Sure, Joey said, I'll pick you up, you drop me back here and then you can use my car to deliver the fish.

to deliver the fish.

Joey Giacalone arrived at the Teamsters office a little before noon in his new, burgundy Mercury Marquis Brougham. O'Brien walked out with the unwieldy carton over his shoulder, irked that it was dripping pink liquid onto his white shirt.

Spreading newspapers to catch the seeping mess, O'Brien and Giacalone put one end of the box in the reartootwell of the big Mercury and angled the other end out the opposite window.

Holines was away, at the union meeting in Toronto. He was surprised to learn O'Brien was a no-show, asking a companion, "Where the hell is the little bastard."

+Holmes wife; Vi, was dealing with a cranky infant son when O'Brien arrived at midday with a thawing fish dripping blood all over her clean floors.

O'Brien hustled the box into the kitchen and opened it Vi Holmes recolled at the sight of the fish staring up at her

"I can't stand it," she said Don't worry, said O'Brien, grabbing a knife and chopping off the head."

"I'll cut," he said "You wrap."
They quickly reduced the salinon to a tidy stack of steaks. O'Brien made a couple of calls that no one seemed to answer and then left, taking with him the soggy fish box, and the head and tail.

Jimmy Hoffa ate lunch at home with Josephine, then cleaned up for his meeting. He decided against his usual business suit; donning a blue Ban-Lon shirt with a zipper front, blue pants and blue shoes.

Hoffa wore his trademark, workingman's white socks. Jo said he always wore them because dark socks weren't absorbent enough for his sweaty feet. Even when he was union president, he wore custom-made socks that were black from the ankle up and white cotton on the bottom.

Before leaving home, Hoffa called William Aumock, a business agent with a sign-painters' union local in Hazel Park. Hoffa asked him to find someone to paint a mural at the lakefront house, which everyone still referred to as "the cottage."

Hoffa said he didn't want a gift; he'd pay for the painting.

About 1:15 p.m., Hoffa was piloting his green Pontiac Grand Ville south. He didn't use his seat belt and had inserted a plastic card into the clasp to silence an irritating buzzet.

Before his meeting, Hoffa wanted to stop in Pontiac to see "the Pope."

It was an unusual nickname for Louie Linteau, who, at 61 had a weathered face, crew cut hair and a foil mouth. Friends had hung him with the moniker years ago because he seemed to be everywhere all the time.

Linteau was a former president of Teamsters Local 614 in Pontiac and had been a close friend of Hoffa's for decades. Hoffa had secretly helped him start his new limousine company. Air port Service Lines, in an old garage at 200 N. Paddock in Pontiac.

Holfa stopped by once in a while to use the weight lifting equipment in an exercise room Linteau set up at the rear of the place

Airport Service employees said. Hoffa was obviously in a hurry when he arrived around 1:30 p.m. They told him Linteau had left 10 minutes earlier to go to the bank and take an employee, Cynthia Green, to lunch,

Speaking to dispatcher Elmer Reeves — but talking loudly enough for two other employees to hear Hoffa said he was on his way to a restaurant in a shopping center at Telegraph and Maple, the Machus Red Hoffa said he had a meeting there with Tony Giacalone and two other guys. He said their names, but Reeves and the other employees didn't catch them as Hoffa left.

At 2:10 p.m., about the time Tony Giacalone was getting off the massage table, Linteau was on the phone to Local 299 in Detroit, asking whether a secretary for the local had paid out of her own pocket for Chuckie O'Brien's plane ticket to Florida. Linteau knew about O'Brien's past money troubles with Hoffa, former president of Local

And through O'Brien, Linteau also knew Anthony Giacalone. In fact, he had paid Giacalone $135,000 for a Florida condominium. Linteau later would say he had heard that O'Brien was turning to Uncle Tony for money and wonder aloud how O'Brien was going to pay the debt.

A string of no-shows

The parking lot was hot. So was Jimmy Hoffa. His company was late.

At 2:15, Hoffa stalked to the pay phone on a post in front of Damman Hardware, directly behind the Red Fox, and called home

"Where the hell is Giacalone?" he asked Josephine. She said she hadn't heard from anyone **.

A few people recognized him, including a suburban developer who thought it odd to see such a famous figure pacing and fidgeting by himself in a parking lot.

Two Southfield real estate brokers and a client saw Hoffa as they emerged from the Red Fox after a long lunch.

One of the brokers approached him.

"You probably don't remember me," he told Hoffa, "but we met when you spoke at the Lions Club downtown a couple of week ago."

The broker remembered Hoffa was "cordial as all hell" and told him the Lions were 'a great bunch of guysa

They shook hands and parted, and the broker would never forget Hoffa's grip: "Like shaking hands with a steel bar," he said.

While Hoffa perspired, a freshly barbered Tony Giacalône got into the elevator of the Travelers Tower about 3 p.m. and pushed the button for the fourth floor. He walked into Suite 442 for an hour's visit with lawyer Bernard Humphrey.

Louis Linteau returned to his office around 3 p.m. and was told that Hoffa had been there. The meeting made sense to Linteau. He knew about the trouble between Provenzano and Hoffa and he knew that the Giacalones had visited Hoffa at home July 12 - the only time they were ever in his house. Hoffa told Linteau that a meeting was arranged.

At 3:27 p.m., Linteau got a call from Hoffa. He was furious.

"That dirty son of a bitch Tony Jocks set this meeting up, and he's an hour and a half late," Hoffa said.

Calm down, Linteau said. Drop by the office on your way home.

Hoffa said he would and Linteau waited € for him until 6:30, then left for a meeting at the Pine Knob outdoor theater.

"Let me talk to Jimmy," Linteau said to Josephine.

"Where is my husband?" she cried. Linteau tried to reassure her, then hung up and called the Red Fox

"You mean the Jimmy Hoffa?" a hostess said when he asked. There was no paging system, so she quickly walked through the restaurant, checking tables and the bar.

No Hoffa, she said.

Linteau called Anthony Giacalone.

"Have you heard from the Little Guy?" he asked.

"No, why?" Giacalone answered "He's not home and he was sup-posed to meet with you," said Linteau.

Giacalone said he had no such meeting scheduled and had spent most of the day at the Southfield Athletic Club.

Linteau was worried. He called Josephine and told her he would be right over.

Chuckie O'Brien, at the end of his workday, had caught a ride with Joe Valenti, an official of Teamsters Local 214 in Detroit, to a car wash at Grand River and Orchard Lake Road in Farmington, where Adell picked him up.

They went out for a Chinese dinner.

Back home, O'Brien flipped on the television to watch the 11 p.m. news. Nothing caught his attention and he went to bed,

The closing crew left the Red Fox around I a.m. A few workers noticed the green Pontiac in the parking lot, but didn't give it much thought.

hat do you mean Dad didn't come home?"

As the sun was rising July 31, 1975, James Hoffa couldn't believe what his mother was telling him over the phone about his father. He knew there had to be real trouble. Hoffa told his mother he would charter a plane to get home as quickly as possible from his vacation spot near Traverse City. His family could follow by

At 7:30 a.m. Missouri time, the telephone range in Barbara Crancer's St. Louis home.

"Your father didn't come home last night," Josephine Hoffa told her daughter.

She got someone to watch her 12-year-old daughter and raced to the hospital bed where her husband was recovering from a car accident.

"Mom's sick." Crancer told him; not wanting to uset her husband. "She needs me." From his upset her husband, "She needs me." hospital bed, Robert Crancer would learn later watching the evening news why his wife had rushed out of town.

As her flight to Detroit rose, Crancer rested her head against the window and closed her eyes. In her mind, she saw Dad wearing a blue, zipper-front shirt, blue slacks and his blue shoes.

Her father was seated, but slumped over. Crancer pressed her head against the cool glass.

And somehow she knew right then.

"I'll never see him again," she told herself. At the Hoffa home on Square Lake, Josephine had grown increasingly frantic through the night as she sat waiting with longtime friend Louis Linteau. Five times, a dark, compact car had pulled into the long driveway, backed out and left, leaving Josephine near hysteria.

Linteau had fallen asleep around, 3 a.m., but Josephine shook him awake three hours later. Was it time to call the police?_

Linteau told her to wait a while longer and drove back to his office in Pontiac, where Jimmy was supposed to stop after Tuesday's meeting at the Machus Red Fox.

There was no sign of him in Pontiac, so Linteau again called Anthony Giacalone, one of the people Hoffa had said he was supposed to meet.

"Did I wake you?" Linteau asked.
"No, I was making coffee," Giacalone said. "The Little Guy never came home last night," Linteau said.

Giacalone was irked.

'Like I said last night," he told Linteau, "I was at the Southfield Athletic Club."

Any idea where he could be? Linteau asked.

"Maybe he took a little trip," Giacalone said.

By 7:45 a.m., Linteau was in the Red Fox parking lot, looking over a Pontiac that appeared to be Hoffa's.

But the driver's-side door was open and Linteau knew that Hoffa always locked his car. So he opened the glove box and found Hoffa's registration. He noted the plastic card to silence the seat belt buzzer.

Linteau decided it was time to call in the law.

When the missing person report. came into Bloomfield Township police, Chief of Detectives Lt. Curt Grennierthought it might be a joke.

But within a few minutes, a patrol officer had confirmed that the empty, unlocked car in the Red Fox lot was owned by Jimmy Hoffa.

Grennier left immediately for the restaurant. He remembers thinking that if this did turn out to be something big, he didn't want any mistakes that could come back to haunt him or his 60member department.

Grennier also was aware of recent violence involving the Teamsters.

Three weeks earlier the car of Local 299 Vice President Richard Fitz-simmons—son of international immon President Frank Fitzsimmons = was destroyed in a daylight bombing outside Nemo's, a popular saloon near Tiger Stadnim

When they arrived at the Red Fox,-Grennier and Capt. James Keller, the department's chief of operations, agreed that Hoffa's car should be towed to the garage at the police station, up Telegraph to near Long Lake Road:

Soon, Hoffa's son gave verbal authorization to pop the trunk.

Grennier and other police who gathered around half expected to find Hoffa's body inside.

But the trunk was empty:

Grennier recalls thinking at that moment that "we aren't going to find him by ourselves." But he had no way. of knowing how massive and frustrating the search would become.

Loyalty goes out the window

While Hoffa's car sat at one end of the Red Fox lot on that Thursday morning, Chuckie O'Brien was dropped off as usual at the other end to await his ride to work at Teamsters offices in Detroit.

O'Brien was indebted to Frank Fitzsimmons for rescuing him from a union organizing project on the Alaska pipe-3 line, an assignment insiders said was a payback for blowing money and time in California while supposedly recruiting farm workers.

Now Fitzsimmons had agreed to send O'Brien to a Teamsters office just north of Miami, which pleased his new wife, Brenda Burger, who was from Arkansas and not interested in living in the North.

5 x O'Brien even had regained his union credit cards, which were revoked after his California misadventure.

Born in Kansas City, Mo., and a graduate of a military academy, O'Brien came to Detroit in 1952 and signed on as junior organizer with the Teamsters. Five years later, he was assigned to be an assistant to Hoffa.

In 1967, O'Brien was promoted to an international organizer, but titles meant little. For a long time, O'Brien basically took care of special favors and errands for Hoffa, and began describing himself as the union leader's foster

He took credit for burglarizing a reporter's apartment to look for law enforcement files and for pulling a gruesome stunt involving Detroit News Editor Martin Hayden.

Riled by the newspaper's anti-Hoffa stance, O'Brien claimed he was part of the crew that sent Hayden a gift package containing a human head its eyes propped open with toothpicks from a medical school cadaver.

O'Brien explained the prank years later with a rueful grin, saying he was young at the time, and "when you're young, you do goofy things."

When Hoffa went to prison in 1967. O'Brien was on the limited visitors list and hired a plane to fly a Happy Birthday banner over the penitentiary every year on Hoffa's birthday, Valentine's Day.

But their relationship started to sour after Hoffa's release in December

Hoffa believed O'Brien had squandered some of his money and knew O'Brien was increasingly in debt to the Giacalones. Hoffa, who valued loyalty, also saw O'Brien aligning more with Fitzsimmons, whom Hoffa saw as his rival for control of the union.

Hoffa also pulled some old levers to crush O'Brien's dream of running for president of Detroit Local 299, Hoffa's old local and the power base he planned to use to retake the union helm.

There was even word at an April 1975 Teamsters convention that O'Brien was trying to spread a rumor that Hoffa could be cooperating with his old enemy the FBI in an investigation of the union.

It didn't have much credibility coming from O'Brien, who had a reputation for embellishing facts.

Bloomfield Township police, meanwhile, had few clues at all and one of the department's first steps was to put out a call for help. Soon, state police evidence technicians were poring over Hoffa's car.

The FBI technically had no reason to be involved in a local missingperson case, but Special Agent Robert Neumann was sent in to keep an eye on the situation.

Detroit Police sent an organized crime expert.

An interview team of Grennier, Neumann, State Police Detective Sgt. Joseph Koenig, Bloomfield Detective Wally Quarles and Sgt. William Noseworthy of the Detroit Police set out to talk to Linteau at his Pontiac office.

Linteau's secretary had to bring in extra chairs to accommodate all the cops who filled Linteau's small, spare office at the rear of his limousine

The Pope, as he was known, was in fine form, relating what he knew of events leading to Hoffa's disappearance, punctuating with profanity and bouncing to his feet to make a point. He was sure that Hoffa had called him at exactly 3:27 p.m., railing that Tony Giacalone was late for their meeting.

Quarles couldn't figure out Linteau.

Here was a crude, foulmouthed man in a cheap office in the back of a garage talking about famous people such as Jimmy Hoffa as if they were intimate friends.

It didn't make sense. "How did he get to rub elbows with Hoffa and the rest of these guys?'

Quarles asked himself. "We're talking about mob connections and a lot of big names and Louis Linteau. Who the hell is Louis Linteau?":

-"You couldn't tell if he was giving us bullshit or nothing but the truth,"

Grennier said "He'd never shut up, always going off on tangents."

In the course of his story, Linteau also let drop the name of Charles O'Brien. He told the police that everyone knew O'Brien as Chuckie said "Where were you? Where were calls you?"

O'Brien wanted to know where Hoffa's son was. Linteau said the young Hoffa was on his way home, maybe already there. Then he demanded again to know where O'Brien had been all day.

O'Brien called the Pope a "no-good asshole" and hung up.

He reached James Hoffa a short time later at the son's home in Troy.

Although the two were hardly friends, much less family, O'Brien said:

"Louie says Dad is missing."
Hoffa asked O'Brien to "cover the house" in Troy for messages, visitors or trouble while he joined his mother at Square Lake.

Sure, said O'Brien, except he had.

Once again he called Anthony Giacalone's son, Joey, who was headed north anyway; with tickets for a Chicago concert at Pine Knob. They stopped first at Giacalone's lakeside condominium in St. Clair Shores, where O'Brien chatted with Uncle Tony while Joey showered and changed.

By now the Hoffa story was all over the news, and Chuckie would recall later that Uncle Tony expressed concern about his missing acquaintance.

At the Hoffa house, son James was giving police more insight into "the kinds of dealings" his father was involved in, and why he was certain this was more than a missing person case.

James Hoffa said that on May 15, he hosted a meeting between his father and Vito and Anthony Giacalone in his law office on the 33rd floor of the Guardian Building in downtown Detroit. He said Anthony Giacalone wanted Jimmy Hoffa to make peace with Anthony (Tony Pro) Provenzano, a New Jersey Teamsters official.

CHoffa said that the Giacalones told his father that Provenzano was openly criticizing and threatening Jimmy Hoffar, He said it was clear his father wanted nothing more to do with Tony Pro and turned thumbs down on a meeting. Young Hoffa said his father had excluded him from a meeting at the house with the Giacalones two weeks

He said the Giacalones also wanted Jimmy Hoffa to get his hands on documents that were to be used by a federal strike force to obtain a grand jury indictment against Anthony Giacalone in an alleged insurance scam. Jimmy Hoffa said he was unable to help, but they parted on good terms, young Hoffa said.

Grennier said he had "no reason to suspect" foul play, although "we're giving it every consideration - let's out it that way."

Reporters repeatedly asked whom Hoffa was supposed to meet at the Machus Red Fox. Grennier would only say "there's a lot of speculation."

One of the questions was particularstupid: "Is Mrs. Hoffa upset?"

Grennier can't recall exactly what he said, except that "you give a dumb answer to a dumb question.

Marty Woehl, the boy next door, has never seen anything like it.

They were there from all over the world — Hong Kong, England, every-where," he said, "I had my autograph book with me."

The reporters mostly ignored him as he pedaled his bike up and down the two-lane road in front of the Hoffa place, eavesdropping on their chatter. "I was just a kid," the said. "They treated me like I was a tree."

Today if Hoffa's name comes up,

Woehl mentions that he was the far mous man's neighbor, but "people" don't believe me, so I let it drop."

At the Bloomfield Township Police Station, messages were waiting and telephones were ringing with inquiries from everywhere. And no one had even typed up a missing person report yet.

A. War. O'Brien gets a grilling

After the police left, Jim Hoffa kept running the scenario as he knew it over and over in his mind; and kept coming up with questions.

Where was Anthony Giacalone?

Did Provenzano make it to the meeting?

Why would Dad wait around so

Was Dad taken somewhere else for the meeting?

Who could get Dad into a car?

Where was Frank Fitzsimmons?

And where the hell had Chuckie O'Brien been Wednesday?

Hoffa began making phone calls. trying to account for everyone's movements.

Around 3 a.m. Aug. 2, he called O'Brien, still stationed at Hoffa's house in Troy.

O'Brien said Hoffa's wife and children were asleep; he had all the lights on and a .30-.30 rifle slung across his lap. Nobody, he assured Hoffa, was going to pull anything with him around.

Hoffa told O'Brien to come to the cottage right away. O'Brien balked, saying he didn't want to leave Jim's wife and kids. Hoffa said they'd be all right, especially since another Teamsters official was there, too

He said he knew O'Brien skipped out on a union business trip to Toronto the day of the meeting, and knew his father would never get into a car with someone he didn't trust.

"You didn't go_ to Toronto like you were supposed to, Chuckie? Why didn't you go? :Where: were you, · Chuckie?" asked.

O'Brien told him about cleaning out his desk and delivering the fish.

Afterward, he said he had stopped by the Southfield Athletic Club to see Uncle Tony.

O'Brien said he felt himself "reaching the boiling point" under Hoffa's interrogation. He left around 4:45 a.m.

The two men have not seen each other since.

Snooping turns up little

On the morning of Aug. 1," an undercover team of Detroit police officers set up surveillance of the Giacalone brothers, watching for anything that might be a clue to the Hoffa case.

They were parked on a winding, shaded street just off Lake St. Clair in Grosse Pointe Shores, watching the home of Vito Giacalone. ....

In the driveway were two Cadillacs Wito's black one and Tony's peach and black model plus a white Lincoln Continental driven by their old friend Silverio (Sal) Vitello, a figure in Greektown gambling circles.

After an hour, the Giacalones and Vitello all left in the Lincoln for Sterling Heights, where they dropped in on Stanley Sobo, a dry cleaner with a long police record that included a conviction for bombing a competitor.

After a quick visit, the Lincoln headed west to the Troy Hilton, where the trio entered the coffee shop. Undercover officers Cynthia Wisniewski and Sgt. Dale Heberly followed them, arm in arm, and took the next booth.

Carefully pulling out a small notebook and pencil so she wouldn't be noticed. Wisniewski jotted down the snatches of conversation she could overhear.

Vitello brought up Hoffa's name, saying a "mutual friend" had shown him a box from Alaska that Hoffa wanted. 10.17

"But he's not going to get it," Vitello said.

For the next nine days Detroit police ran a painstaking surveillance of the Giacalones, watching them get their cars washed, go to the Southfield Athletic Club, drive to restaurants for lunch and dinner, and turn away re-

. Once, on the evening of Aug. 9, surveillance officers saw Anthony Giacalone yell obscenities at a television news crew that had filmed him with his wife leaving their apartment at 24000 E. Jefferson in St. Clair Shores. Swearing loudly, Giacalone grabbed the camera from the news crew and tore out the film.

But that brief conversation overheard by Wisniewski in the coffee shop and never really understood - was as close as the police ever got to the Giacalones in the Hoffa investigation.

"Young Jimmy was istening to that screwy Louie Linteau." He was brainwashed by the FBL I became the enemy. They worked on Jimmy Jr.'s mind—the deceit they put between us, the bitterness.

The phone at the Hona nouse continued to ring night and day. James Hoffa turned off the tape recorder when he recognized Frank Fitzsimmons on the line, but Hoffa's former protege shed no light on the mystery, only asking whether there was anything he could do.

The family quickly had another phone line installed so they could dial out without missing an incoming call that might be important.

James Hoffa talked to his sister about calling Peter Hurkos, a Dutch housepainter who had become a fa-mous psychic. When they learned that Hurkos would command a $15,000 fee, the children decided against it.

On Aug. 8, Barbara Crancer got a call from Josephine Provenzano, 19year-old daughter of Tony Pro in New Jersey, and a friend of the Hoffa children.

Crancer asked about Josephine's father. The teenager said he was in the backyard, but he never came to the who killed Jinmy Hoffa, how and why.

But the answers are locked away in cabinets jammed with thousands of documents, reports and memoranda—and the FBI isn't talking about the case agents dubbed "HOFFEX," bureaucratic shorthand for Hoffa-Extortion.

Hoffa's children — Barbara Crancer and James P. Hoffa — believe it is time to open those files

"There is no reason not to," said Crancer, a labor lawyer when her father vanished and now a circuit judge in St. Louis. "We're ready to deal with whatever's in there."

Crancer filed a Freedom of Information request for the files in 1987, and followed up in 1990 with a lawsuit to open HOFFEX. The Free Press has filed a similar suit seeking access to the documents.

In both cases, the FBI is arguing that the Hoffa case is still an open investigation, with possible arrests and prosecution in jeopardy if its evidence is made public.

Crancer gained one victory when a federal judge ordered the government to compile an index of all its documents so a determination could be made of what might be too sensitive to release and what could reasonably be made public. But the government is in a second stage of appealing that ruling, and Crancer has yet to see such an index.

ments chosen and submitted to him by the FBI and decided in 1991 that the government was right, the files should remain closed.

LaPlata said that the case was not languishing and that the release of FBI information would allow suspects to destroy evidence, fabricate alibis or intimidate witnesses.

Free Press attorney Herschel Fink said LaPlata "set a terrible precedent" by basing his decision on the FBI's "handpicked documents."

"It's tantamount to allowing the government the power to police itself," he said. The Free Press is appealing the ruling.

Kenneth Walton, formerly the special agent in charge of the Detroit FBI office and now a congressional investigator, said the Hoffa case cannot be viewed in stark black-and-white terms.

"The case had been solved from a law enforcement viewpoint," he said. "But it is not solved from a prosecutorial standpoint."

Walton said that many of the witnesses who talked to the FBI would never repeat their stories in court, and some have since died. some have since died.

CHAIN OF EVENTS

One of the FBI's first official communiques about the Hoffa disappearance recounted an interview with Hoffa's son in which James P. Hoffa asserted that Chuckie O'Brien had to be involved in Hoffa's disappearance.

The FBI made several attempts to duplicate the movements of O'Brien on the day Hoffa vanished, using the times and places O'Brien gave agents. But the re-creations always finished. with 60-90 minutes to spare.

In its first working theory of the case, the FBI declared that Hoffa probably thought he was being taken to the Southfield Athletic Club for a meeting when "a hit man was waiting at a select spot and either shot or strangled Hoffa."

Cops sweep a Michigan field.

Police and FBI agents spent hours with a secret informant who swore he had seen Hoffa get into a maroon car driven by O'Brien, Police were crestfallen when the informant finally said his vision came from God.

O'Brien's private, unlisted telephone number was found the home of Salvatore Briguglio, one of the New Jersey mob figures suspected of killing Hoffa, in an FBI search on March 22, 1978 - the day after Briguglio was shot to death in New York.

The FBI searched a Hamtramck sanitation plant for Hoffa's remains.

Police pursued tips that Hoffa's body was in a cornfield near Jackson, a gravel pit near Milford, a field in Waterford Township and an empty pool house behind a Bloomfield Hills mansion. The FBI searched a Hamtramck waste disposal facility where the body supposedly was destroyed.

Hoffa's death and the disposition of his body.

Hoffa was declared legally dead on Dec. 9, 1982, seven years and five months after he vanished.

The prevailing law enforcement theory is that Hoffa got into a car with someone he trusted, then was killed. Some investigators believe he was killed in the car, others that he was taken to a nearby location and killed. Knowing Hoffa's fearless nature.

Knowing Hoffa's fearless nature and strength — he once rushed and overpowered a man who pulled a gun in overpowered a man who pulled a gus un a Tennessee courtroom — some in-vestigators think he must have been rendered quickly unconscious in the car, possibly with chloroform. The killers probably disposed of Hoffa's body right away, in the Detroit area. There was no need to haul it—as some informants have claimed -- to a landfill or Giants Stadium in New Jersey, or out to the middle of Lake Michigan.

By Joe Swickard

He said "Dad and Uncle Tony" as O'Brien referred to Hoffa and Anthony Giacalone would never meet anyplace so public as the Red Fox. For two such well-known figures, "it'd be like meeting on television on the Chan-nel 7 News," he said O'Brien characterized his supposed falling out with Hoffa and Hoffa's reported feud with mob-connected New Jersey Teamster Anthony (Tony Pro) Provenzano as "all just newspaper talk."

O'Brien said he had been in the Memphis area since leaving Detroit three days earlier. He neglected to mention a stop at Teamsters headquarters in Washington for a meeting with Fitzsinmons.

Bloomfield, Township, Lt., Curt Grennier said the session left him feeling that a smug O'Brien was trying to hoodwink the police. "It was like he was saying Ask me any question you want, but you're not going to learn a whole lot," Grennier said. "We kept pressing and press-ing." We were pretty sure that he wasn't telling us everything, not that he was lying, but he wasn't divulging some things

As the detectives left Teamsters headquarters on Trumbull near Tiger Stadium, they were mobbed by reporters and cameramen who followed them down the sidewalk. But the police weren't talking.

Then a reporter spotted O'Brien leaving the building, and almost as one, the media pack descended on him. A reporter who was standing the wrong way got a TV cord wrapped around his neck and was dragged halfway down the block.

The police huddled afterward to review the three-hour O'Brien interview. They compiled a list of problems ■ On the day Hoffa vanished, O'Brien could not account for his time from about 2:30 until 4 p.m., when he was back at his office. That period was critical in the Hoffa disappearance O'Brien claimed he was at the South field Athletic Club at 2 p.m. that day but no one saw him there

■ He said he was waiting for a ride to work as usual at 8 a.m. July 31, less than 100 feet from the Red Fox lot where Hoffa's abandoned car sat, but claimed he never noticed it.

■ He claimed he heard of the disappearance on the morning of July 31 and it enraged him. But others said O'Brien was told around 2 p.m. that day and waited about 20 minutes before making some telephone inquiries.

■ He said he was on good terms with both limmy Hoffa and son James, but everyone else seemed to know other-wise.

After he left the Teamsters offices, O'Brien called the Hoffa home. Police were eavesdropping, as usual.

"I told them the truth," O'Brien told James Hoffa

"I want you to take a polygraph, Hoffa told him

I'll have to talk to my lawyer about that one," C Brien said.

Young Hoffa hung up on him: By the end of the day, as O'Brien headed back to Memphis and his bride, the FBI had formulated its first working theory of the case:

brother, Vito (Billy Jack) Giacalone, at the Red Fox, and they drove toward the Southfield Athletic Club, But 'a hit man was waiting at a select spot and either shot or strangled Hoffa."

But the Giacalones weren't volunteering anything Grand hury subpoe. nas produced nothing but a string of nonanswers.

And authorities still had no one 🚐 credible who saw Hoffa leave the Red Fox lot ______intil the call from a man who would be known only by one of the code numbers the FBI assigns informants:
DE 7223-PCI
The secret witness told FBI agents he saw Jimmy Hoffa get into a black Lincoln with two men.

Under questioning by agents, he refined it to a maroon car, and insisted it was driven by Chuckie O'Brien. The color marcon was key. Few people knew that O'Brien had told investigators about borrowing Joey Giacalone's new maroon Mercury the day Hoffa vanished. The Mercury also had the long boxy look of a Lincoln.

The informant was given a lie detector test.

The results were teletyped imme diately to FBI Director Clarence Kelly: It was concluded that DE 7223 PCI was not truthful."

But the witness was insistent, signing a sworn statement. Another test was given, this time concluding: "Possible deception."

Agents took DE 7223-PCI back to the Red Fox lot, and he pointed out the wrong spot when asked where Hoffa's car had been that day.

But at least one agent who was on the case said the informant remained

'a very believable guy.'

"He came up with the story on the maroon car, and we thought it was a pretty secret piece of information. We didn't realize that it had appeared in a newspaper article somewhere, very obliquely. ... We had every reason to believe him. So we did."

The FBI set up a meeting for the informant with Robert Ozer, head of the federal strike force in Detroit working on a grand jury investigation of Hoffa.

DE 7223-PCI told his story yet again. "This is almost too good to be true," an agent said.

Then DE 7223-PCI added a postscript.

"I'm just trying to help you guys out," he said. "God told me to do this.

The man said his knowledge of Hoffa's abduction had come in a vision sent by God.

Investigators were crushed.

"We felt like idiots," said one FBI agent. "Oh, God, that was a downer."

'Hothing to gain'

New Jersey state police, meanwhile, had tracked Anthony Provenzano down at the Franklin Diner on Route 17 in Hasbruck Heights, NJ., where Sgt. Jim Sweeney of the intelligence bureau conducted an interview.

Hoffa had told several people that he expected Tony Pro to be with Anthony Giacalone at the July 30th meeting.

Provenzano, a New Jersey Teamsters official and ex-convict with reputed underworld ties, told Sweeney he was a close friend of both Jimmy Hoffa and Frank Fitzsimmons and would have "nothing to gain" by Hoffa's disappearance, Provenzano said he and Hoffa were inseparable in prison, even ate most of their meals together, but had not seen each other since their release.

"He's my type of man," Provenzano said. "Aggressive and hard working."

Provenzano speculated that the only people who stood to benefit from Hoffa's death were his family, who would get insurance money, and black Teamsters, who could make a play for union power with Hoffa out of the way.

On the afternoon of the supposed meeting, Provenzano said he was playing cards at his New Jersey union hall with his brother Salvatore and a pal, Stephen Andretta.

Back in Detröit, authorities obtained a search warrant for Joey Giacalone's 1975 maroon Mercury Brougham, the car O'Brien had borrowed. It was seized Aug. 9 at 2 a.m. from Giacalone's St. Clair Shores condominium.

Preliminary tests showed no sign of human blood on the seats or in the trunk of the car. But numerous hair samples and unknown microscopic particles were taken, as well as several fingerprints.

In the trunk, agents found a Remington Wingmaster model 870 .12-gauge pump shotgun, serial number T056008V. The gun had a black pistol-type grip, an extra-long tube with room for additional shells, and a metal folding stock on which was stamped "For Law Enforcement Only."

Joey Giacalone readily admitted the shotgun belonged to him. Agents confirmed that he bought it on March 17, 1975, at Peter's Gun Shop in Roseville. Agents also found an empty black pistol holster under the front passenger seat. In the glove box were numerous rounds of .38-caliber bullets, several .22-caliber Magnum rounds, a hand-kerchief and a shirt.

In all, agents collected enough evidence to fill two cartons — each measuring three feet by three feet by three inches — for shipment to FBI labs.

Later, FBI technicians would go over every speck, nit, thread or hair found inside the car. One "single, three-inch brown head hair" from the car had "characteristics similar" to Hoffa's hair, and may have had blood on it.

Three trained tracking dogs, two of them brought in from Philadelphia, picked up Hoffa's scent in the backseat of the Mercury.

But none of it added up to a case against anyone, and the investigation began taking some strange turns as tips continued to pour in.

On Aug. 11, police and FBI agents searched a 100-acre gravel pit owned by Jimmy Hoffa's brother William near Highland on the Oakland-Livingston county border. Later, infrared photos of the pit were taken from a military plane, but there was no sign of a body or disturbed earth to mark a grave.

On Aug. 12, James Hoffa received a ransom letter demanding $1 million in small bills.

"If law is around, good-bye James Riddle Hoffa," the note read. "We send back nuts, not ears. He is already wounded. We had to cut him up a bit." The note, signed Queen Liz, directed Hoffa to deliver the money to the 711 Bar on Michigan in downtown Detroit at 2 p.m. on Aug. 19.

He didn't go. No one else showed up, either, except police.

The FBI decided it was time to talk again with O'Brien, but an agent let slip on Aug. 17 that no one seemed to know where he was.

Headlines and TV news screamed for a day that a key witness in the Hoffa case had vanished. O'Brien's son saw an NBC news account in West Memphis, Ark., and turned to his father.

"Dad," he said, "you're missing."
The next day, O'Brien left his wife again to fly into Detroit for what he expected to be a nice, quiet interview. Instead, the Metro Airport gate area was packed wall to wall with reporters and photographers, yelling questions and fighting for position.

"It was insane," O'Brien said. "The FBI went and leaked this, and you wouldn't believe it there. It was insane."

This session was conducted in a police office at the airport, and agents tried to pin Chuckie down about the car, the fish, the club and just when he had gone where.

Discrepancies kept cropping up.

O'Brien now said he had spoke to Anthony Giacalone the night before Hoffa vanished, and Uncle Tony said he was going spend the whole afternoon of July 30th at the Southfield Athletic Club.

O'Brien added details about his own brief meeting that day with Giacalone, saying Uncle Tony had given him two $100 bills as graduation presents for O'Brien's children.

And O'Brien said he left the club at 3:15 p.m. — later than he'd claimed before.

O'Brien finally gave the agents a timetable, ticking off what he had done that day and when. It did not at all match the story he had just told.

But above all, O'Brien was adamant that Hoffa was not in the maroon Mercury that day.

"Never," he insists to this day. "If he was in there, you might just as well put Hitler in there, too. No way was he in there."

"I loved the Old Man," O'Brien said, and he left town again.

A few days later, FBI agents tried to duplicate Chuckie's movements of July 30. No matter how many times they ran through his timetable, they always came up with 60-90 minutes of extra time.

In late August, the FBI laid out a startling scenario to get a search warrant for Central Sanitation Services, an industrial waste disposal firm in Hamtranck owned in part by Raffael (Jimmy Q) Quasarano.

In a sealed affidavit filed to get the warrant, agents said they had been told by two FBI informants that Hoffa's body was "totally destroyed" by the disposal company's commercial size shredders, compactors and incinerators. One said 10 other gangland victims had gone the same way.

According to the affidavit, Teamster President Fitzsimmons had made an unusual, solitary trip to Detroit the weekend before Hoffa disappeared and secretly met with Quasarano at Larco's Inn on West McNichols.

The affidavit noted that rather than using any of the luxury autos available from the union in Detroit, Fitzsimmons got around during his visit in a car borrowed from Ron Roxburgh, Central Sanitation's president.

Fitzsimmons acknowledged the Detroit visit to the FBI, but denied meeting with Quasarano and Vitale, the affidavit said.

The bureau got its warrant and the FBI took trained dogs into the plant to hunt for any scent of Hoffa, Nothing was found.

APPENDING THE PROPERTY OF THE

Central Sanitation was destroyed by fire in 1978. Part of its property is now occupied by the new Wayne County Jail in Hamtramck.

Everybody searches a field

On Sept. 26, 1975, some reporters covering the Hoffa disappearance were told about a tremendous break coming the next day - so secret even the FBI didn't know.

Seems a one-time FBI informant from California with loose Teamsters connections had told U.S. Labor Department investigators and U.S. Sen. Henry (Scoop) Jackson, D-Wash., that Hoffa's body was buried in a field in Waterford Township.

Jackson decided to bypass the FBI with his information, relaying it instead to Michigan Gov. William Milliken, the state police and Attorney General Frank Kelley, Plans were made to search the field on Sept. 27, a Saturday, and, of course, word leaked out, but nobody knew how far.

Ralph Orr, Free Press labor writer at the time, recalled that the newspaper got one of the leaks and thought it had the story to itself. Editors convened a midnight meeting in the newsproom to parcel out assignments for what surely would be the scoop of the century.

ntury. Shortly before dawn, Free Press reporters reached the rendezvous point where state police detectives had. gathered. So did dozens of other reporters and camera crews -enough to form a strange caravan en route to: the field, complete with backhoes.

Quarles, the Bloomfield detective. made sure he was clad for the expedition from head to toe, lest poison ivy be lurking.

Attorney General Kelley insisted on being present for the search and Michigan State Police Detective Sgt Joseph Koenig picked him up at Oakland Ponti-"ac Airport: Kelley arrived at 5 a.m. wearing tennis clothes and carrying a racket: Someone from the state police decided to call Assistant Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson, since if anything was found, the local office would probably handle criminal charges. Thompson called his boss, L. Brooks Patterson, to let him know. Frank Kelley was working his turf.

"Although we weren't officially invited, Thompson said, "we decided to go Mhen we got there, it was like a big circus. This huge field was cordoned off, helicopters from the TV stations were flying all over, people were selling hot dogs and popcom along the side of the road."

The circus went on for two days, posting a $200,000 reward for information.

But the field never yielded anything. except dirt.

In October, Koenig, and FBI agents Jim Esposito and Bob Garrity took off after another tip: Hoffa's body was at the bottom of a swimming pool behinda Bloomfield Hills mansion near Turtle Lake.

The owner of the mansion couldn' be reached to give police permission to cross his property, so the three knyest gators borrowed a canoe and paddled across a swamp to the site described by the tipster.

The pool house had been abandoned years before, and the pool inside was empty: The cops poked around for a few minutes, but their hopes sank and they began paddling back.

On the way, their borrowed canoe sprung a leak and sank, too. In their suits, the investigators sloshed their way back to dry land.

The weeks were beginning to pile into months. The investigators plodded on, but they also realized that crimes of violence are usually solved within days or not at all. And they didn't even have a body yet.

1,000 talks with lawyer

Ralph Picardo a former Teamster. in Anthony Provenzano's New Jersey Local 560, contacted federal agents on Nov. 5 from the East coast prison where he was serving a murder sen-

Picardo said he had been visited by two of his many mutual friends with Provenzano, brothers Stephen and Thomas Andretta: He said Stephen had indirectly let slip that Tony Pro's outfit was involved in Hoffa's slaying, saying he had remained in New Jersey to provide Provenzano's card-playing

Based on Picardo's story, the FBI rushed after subpoenas to get the Andrettas and two of Provenzano's: other top associates, brothers Gabriel and Salvatore (Sally Bugs) Briguglio, to Detroit for police lineups and grand jury questioning.

Stephen Andretta astounded court: officials by leaving the grand jury room. 1,000 times to confer with his lawyer, William Bufalino Sr. Bufalino handed; out autographed footballs around the:

courthouse to mark the 1,000th time.
Andretta was finally ailed for con-1 tempt when he refused to testify even? after being given immunity from prosecution. But he kept silent.

State Police Detective Koenig said and private citizens kept looking after- he passed the time during a long wait ward, especially with Hoffa's family prior to lineups at the Oakland County Jail by playing chess with Thompson, the assistant Oakland prosecutor.

He said he kept one eye on the four suspects from New Jersey, and was drawn repeatedly to the short, squat Salvatore Briguglio:

"You could see that his brain was in turmoil and he was having difficulty coping with it," Koenig said, "We all agreed he'd be the one to focus on. But with no hard evidence, they, never got much of a chance

On March 21, 1978, Sally Bugs was shot to death by two hooded gunmen at a restaurant in New York's Little Italy.

There was a flicker of hope about a case against Stephen Andretta in January 1976, when a previously silent witness told Bloomfield Township police he was sure he had seen Andretta at the Red Fox restaurant almost a month to the day before Hoffa vanished from its parking lot.

Let During his standoff with the grand jury, Andretta said he had never been in Michigan before. The witness said he recognized Andretta from news accounts and was certain Andretta was lying. . . .

A businessman who did not want his name known, the witness said he was parked in an isolated section of the same lot on June 26, 1975, doing some paperwork, when a Lincoln or Cadillac, black over gray, parked in front of him.

The witness said a man who looked like Andretta walked from the car to the restaurant and back. He said the man noticed him in his car and walked over.

"What are you doing?" he asked the businessman." 4

"Don't I know you?" the business man replied. "No," I don't think we ever met."

the man said, then glanced at the businessman's paperwork and walked back to his car.

It was intriguing information but useless unless the businessman was willing to testify before a a grand jury. He never did.

Another lead to nowhere

The most popular solution

Based on information that was good, but not good enough, the FBI eventually refined its theory of the case, as outlined in a January 1976 memo called HOFFEX. It remains the most_agreed-upon scenario of what happened to Jimmy Hoffa:

ANOTER LEAD TO NOWERS

ally Quaries was not, tired, frustrated and itching like mad.

The Bloomfield Township Police detective had just spent eight hours on 'a scorching Saturday rooting around a cornfield and woods south of Jackson, search ing for the body of Jimmy Hoffa Quaries had been working the Hoffa case for, three days with virtually no sleep when he got the tip around 1 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 2, about the cornfield. The caller wouldn't give a name, but he sounded good, he knew things, and his directions were precise.

So Quaries desperate for a lead, had headed west at first light and assembled a posse of a dozen cops to help.

But it had been a totally wasted day — at a time when the beleaguered Bloomfield Township department didn't have a day to waste on the biggest case in its history.

On top of it all, Quaries had gotten poison ivy and was facing a two-hour trip home with painfully irritated hands, arms and legs

That was the most miserable ride of my life; the detective said. Even with medication, it was a week before Quaries suffering eased.

That first weekend after his father vanished, Jimmy Hoffa's son James was feeling sick, too.

Increasingly, he was convinced that Chucke O'Brien; the Teamster his father had once treated like a son, was involved in what probably was the murder of Jimmy Hoffa. No matter how much leeway he allowed; the young Hoffa couldn't account for O'Brien's time on the Wednesday afternoon Hoffa's father disappeared from the parking lot of the Machus Red Fox restaurant at Maple and Telegraph roads.

O'Brien and young Hoffa had parted on had terms before dawn Friday when Hoffa refused to stop grilling O'Brien about his whereabouts on the day in question. O'Brien had promised, though, to begin some ground work for his own investigation of the mystery.

O'Brien had once been a special assistant to Jimmy Hoffa, the union leader's right-hand man for whatever needed doing. But now, his reputation was becoming that of a loudmouth, go sip and hanger-on.

O'Brien was then way down the list of people police wanted to interview about Hoffa. Anthony (Tony Jack) Giacalone, the reputed organized crime captain Hoffa said he was going to meet the day he vanished, was still at the top.

In fact, while police sweated and young Hoffa fretted on that Saturday, O'Brien and Giacalone, the man he called Uncle Tony, were in the cool confines of the barbershop at the Southfield Athletic Club.

Jeffrey Schultz, the club's executive vice president, said he was surprised to see Giacalone show up that day, because of all the publicity linking him to Hoffa

But Giacalone told Schultz he was "not about to hide my head in a hole because of some lousy news stories.

O'Brien left the club just ahead of Giacalone and noticed Uncle Tony's "security" -- the undercover police who had been tailing him for two days.

That night. O'Brien attended the wedding of his friend Bobby Adell, the former Detroit fire commissioner whose wealthy brother Marvin had been letting O'Brien live in his base-* ment since O'Brien's divorce. O'Brien stayed at the wedding reception until 3 a.m. but was up at 7:30 to catch a ride to Metro Airport from Hymie Cooper, an employee of Marvin Adell.

O'Brien was getting ready to kiss Detroit good-bye and take a Teamsters job near Miami arranged for him by Frank Fitzsimmons, the union president who had succeeded Hoffa and then drawn Hoffa's public wrath for the way he ran the nation's largest labor organization.

During the ride, O'Brien looked out the back window of Cooper's car and said, "I'll bet they re following me."

But nobody was

The FBI takes over

Nothing was going right for the local and state police trying to crack the case.

A tape recorder police had given the Hoffa family to record all their telephone calls kept eating the tapes. Finally a detective went out and bought a new Sony.

But Sunday at 6:30 p.m. came good

The FBI called and announced they were assuming jurisdiction.

Previously barred from taking on a purely local missing person case, the FBI now said communications had been received demanding a ransom for Hoffa and implying he had been taken across state lines. That was enough to make a federal case of it — and bring to bear the FBI's massive, nationwide resources and expertise, the same force that spent a decade gathering the evidence that sent Jimmy Hoffa to prison for almost five years.

The communications were never fully explained, but Bloomfield Township police were too relieved to ask many questions.

Within the hour, FBI agent Bob Neumann, who had been informally advising the local police, and agents Bob Garrity and Mort Nichol were at the Hoffa cottage, reinterviewing family members.

James Hoffa, a near match for his father in intensity, immediately told the agents that the family considered Chuckie O'Brien the "prime suspect." He said O'Brien had stolen money from his father, thrown in with the Giacalones to extricate himself from serious personal financial problems and had shunned Jimmy Hoffa's overtures at reconciliation.

In the spare language of the bureau's internal communication, an agent sent a report to FBI headquarters in Washington:

"Detroit has determined that Giacalones were aware of O'Brien's financial plight : and insured commitment of O'Brien by furnishing him with the financing he needed.

- "It is the belief of James P. Hoffa that O'Brien was instrumental and a direct participant in disappearance of Hoffa, and planning of events leading up to disappearance."

Agents also were given a note written by Hoffa that seemed to be his itinerary for Wednesday, July 30: "TG 2:30 Wed 14 Mile Tel Fox Rest Maple

On Sunday morning, Aug. 3, other agents arrived at the Hoffa cottage to install equipment to monitor all calls. One agent was finishing a connection when he tapped into a conversation of Hoffa's daughter, Barbara Crancer.

"No, I'm very surprised," saying about the G-men who had dogged her father for years. "Actually, they're very nice."
They were also very intense.

A Southfield real estate broker who had shaken Hoffa's hand in the Red Fox lot was visited at least nine times by the FBI in the first few weeks of the investigation. He said news accounts of Mafia involvement terrified him and he insists to this day on anonymity.

"I was afraid to turn the ignition on my car," he said: "It really got to me." While the heat was on in Detroit. Chuckie O'Brien was in West Memphis, Ark., enjoying a brief reunion with his new bride. When federal investigators reached him, O'Brien agreed to talk, but wanted to meet on friendly. turf.

So, a meeting was arranged for the afternoon of Aug. 6 at Teamsters headquarters on Trumbull in Detroit.

There, for the first time, investigators heard Chuckie's fish story and about the borrowing of Joey Giaca lone's car. O'Brien also revealed that's after dropping off a salmon sent as a gift to Teamsters official Bobby Holmes, he had stopped by the Southfield Athletic Club to see Anthony, Giacalone.

O'Brien said he stayed just briefly with Uncle Tony, leaving by 3 p.m. to beat rush hour traffic.

Agents were intrigued as O'Brien went on to mention his visit to Giacalone's condominium the day after Hoffa vanished, a dinner the next evening with the Giacalone family at the St. Clair Inn, and his Saturday visit with Uncle Tony back at the club.

How could Chucke so nonchalantly socialize with a man publicly implicated in the Hoffa case?

"It was personal time," O'Brien would explain years later. "We were almost family."
